This one-day workshop covers the structure and utility of Extensible Markup Language (XML) with an emphasis on the relevance of XML to libraries. During the day, discussions will look at the role XML plays in Web design, content management, descriptive metadata, and separating content and presentation on a Web site. The workshop will also demonstrate how XML uses stylesheets to tie together XML-based components for building Web-based applications, develops data interchange, works with metadata and enhances efforts to build and augment other library applications.
